A research team, led by Heather Francis, PhD, assistant research scientist at Indiana University-Bloomington, is working on a study to better understand the role of social networks (family, friends, and other people in your life) on day-to-day treatment adherence and care of adults with cystic fibrosis (CF).

We are looking for participants who:

- Speak and understand English
- Are current U.S. residents

Participants in the study will complete informed consent forms, including HIPAA authorization to access health information and treatment regimen from their CF Clinical team, online surveys, and two web-based or telephone-based interviews. Total time to participate in the trial should be 2-3 hours over the course of a month. Financial Compensation will be provided for participation.
